

Figure 16.1 Presidential government

Presidential government divides power between president and legislature. This distinction is achieved by separate election, as shown, and also by separate survival – the president cannot dissolve the legislature and the legislature can only remove the president through impeachment.

